JOINT OPERATIONS DESK

Ref. JOD / OH-04

Copy 1 of 1 · Destroy by fire

TO: Cpl. Beatrice Lang
FROM: Joint Operations Desk
RE: OPERATION HINTERLAND
ROLE: Scout and field medic. Find the way in. Keep the bodies attached.
PRIORITY: Quietly urgent. Do try not to make a fuss. A fuss is the opposite of the point.

Corporal Lang,

Someone at this desk has finally admitted that a scout who can also keep a body attached to its owner is not a luxury. It is the difference between a team and a sad anecdote. Your last months in the field — eyes first, bandages second — have put you on a very short list. The list has four names. You are one of them.

You are the scout and the medic. Your job is to find the quiet way in without announcing it, watch what the lieutenant is about to walk into, and patch the damage when the way out is less elegant. The others lead, blow, and listen. You keep them on their feet long enough to matter.

You will present yourself at:

Forward Station CHARLIE-MILLS
Charlie-Mills-Strasse 3
Hamburg, Germany

DATE / TIME:

Do not get lost. That would be embarrassing, and this desk does not budget for irony. If you arrive early, you may reconnoitre the kitchen. If you start bandaging people who are only hungry, we will have words.

FOOD: Snacks will be laid on. This is not a promise of a proper meal, a decent cup of tea, or the Empire. Manage your expectations, Corporal.

DRINKS: Bring your own. We are many things. A pub is not one of them.

Bee — if we may — try to keep the lieutenant from walking into the furniture, and the sergeant from turning the furniture into rubble. That is the job. The other job comes later.

I have the honour to remain, etc.,

Col. W. Harrow
Joint Operations Desk

P.S. The first-aid kit is for actual injuries. Crisps do not count, however sharp.
