TO: Sgt. Hélène Vasseur
FROM: Joint Operations Desk
RE: OPERATION HINTERLAND
ROLE: Signals and languages. Wires, sets, and other people's conversations.
PRIORITY: Immediate. Curiosity is not a sufficient excuse for lateness. We checked.

Ma chère Sergent,

Your months among wires, languages, and other people's secrets have made you the least replaceable person in a very replaceable war. HQ would like it noted that this is a compliment. They would also like it noted that they are slightly afraid of you. Both can be true.

You are the signals specialist, and the one who can switch tongues without switching sides. Radios, switchboards, taps, papers: you read them, and if the conversation goes badly you can also turn them into scrap. The others will arrive speaking one language each and expect you to make a team out of it. Quelle surprise.

You are directed to report for briefing:

Forward Station CHARLIE-MILLS
Charlie-Mills-Strasse 3
Hamburg, Germany

DATE / TIME:

Be cautious, of course. Also be on time. Liberté, equality, and try not to take the host's telephone apart before the briefing starts. It is a civilian line. It is allowed to be boring.

FOOD: Snacks will be provided. This is not French cooking. We are aware. Please do not file a complaint in triplicate.

DRINKS: Bring your own. Wine is a personal matter. The desk provides only water and bad decisions.

Do not ask too many questions before you arrive. That is what the briefing is for. We both know you will anyway.

With distinguished regards — and a certain amused distrust,

Col. W. Harrow
